The selection is not to be considered as the result of a judgement on the work of individuals, but rather responds to the desire to build a working group as diverse and heterogeneous as possible.

We have taken into account various requirements such as age, profession, geographical origin, skills, abilities, identifying personalities and propensities that can be considered complementary if framed within a collective logic. Emphasis was also placed on conceptual awareness of their work, interest in contemporary issues (ethics, environment, nature, technology, memory) and ways of communicating and interacting.

We hope that the outcome of this difficult selection process will eventually result in a solid and harmonious group that knows how to work together, each making his or her own specific and fundamental contribution.
